When did you last get blood work?

Most people answer with a year, or a shrug. This practice keeps two blood panels in stock: a general wellness baseline covering metabolic panel, blood count, lipids and hormones, and an IgE panel measuring antibodies to common indoor and outdoor allergens. The draw is taken here; the samples are run by the laboratory.

- One draw, taken here at the practice, covers both panels.
- A raised IgE result means sensitization, not allergy. It is read next to your symptom history.
- Neither panel diagnoses anything on its own, and whether either one is right for you is your practitioner's call, not ours.
